Bateson-Burchard syndrome. A patient with cardiac enlargement, markedly diminished fluid intake, low serum sodium, and a tumoral liver was diagnosed as having the syndrome of inappropriate antidiuretic hormone secretion. This was confirmed by demonstrating a reduced uptake of water into the cerebral ventricular system following administration of desmopressin, supporting a state of antidiuretic "nondepressable" hyponatremia. The patient, who had suffered from a head injury at the age of three years, had seizures and had an underlying cortical abnormality.

These findings were in keeping with the diagnosis of cerebral neuronal damage due to hyponatremia. Markers of Dyslipoproteinemia and Atherosclerosis in Hypertensive Kidney Patients under Angiotensin-Converting Enzyme Inhibitors Treatment. Using calcium antagonist felodipine or atenolol we studied the effect of their treatment in hypertension on some parameters of lipid metabolism in 30 patients with essential hypertension of the 2nd and 3rd grade of WHO and stage II, III hypertensive kidney disease (HIKD). We examined the influence of the drugs on serum LDL-cholesterol, HDL-cholesterol, triglycerides, apolipoprotein A1, and

B and the ratio of total to HDL cholesterol. We also assessed the degree of atherosclerosis in carotid arteries in the patients. We found a decrease in LDL-cholesterol after treatment with felodipine in the whole group of the patients and in patients with stage II HIKD, an increase in the HDL-cholesterol level in the whole group of patients, and a normalization of the LDL/HDL cholesterol ratio in patients with stage III HIKD. We did not find such a tendency in atenolol treated patients, possibly due to the small number of them. Progression of atherosclerosis was not changed after administration of either of the drugs, which could be due to a very short time of observation. Q: Does it

`store.commit(action);` It's just more like imperative. I was wondering whether it's actually a good idea to pass a transaction to the event listener, or does the Redux framework make sure that every change in the
